

Food Pyramid Sample

When we look at food chains in pyramid form they often resemble general population counts of organisms. Plant kingdom species, for example, are a very numerous group and sit at the bottom of the food chain. Animals toward upper parts of the food chain, like osprey, tend to have a small population in comparison to local plant populations.

